Corrections

doi:10.1136/thx.2008.102947corr1

The Guideline Development Group regret that no advice was offered for the management of status epilepticus. As this is a life-threatening condition where a patient may suffer from cerebral hypoxia (and oximetry may not be possible), patients with status epilepticus should be treated in accordance with table 1 (reservoir mask until clinically stabilised). This advice also applies to other rare conditions that may cause life-threatening hypoxaemia that are not listed specifically in table 1.

The correct authors for this abstract are as follows: Roberts JA, Bakerly ND.

The correct authors for this abstract are as follows: Roberts JA, Bakerly ND.

This abstract has been withdrawn.

It has come to the attention of the Scientific Committee that this abstract was not seen by all the authors prior to submission and is therefore withdrawn.

doi:10.1136/thx.2007.088831corr1

The address for correspondence should be: Dr B C Creagh-Brown, Adult Intensive Care Unit, Royal Brompton Hospital, London SW3 6NP, UK; drbencb@gmail.com.